Blizzard abortion column disingenuous propaganda <sup>5</sup>

Friday, October 12, 2012

Sir: If anyone mistakenly holds to the antiquated notion that the news media is honest in its reporting, then it's no small wonder that our culture is suffering from the deleterious effects of that ignorance.

A case in point is the incredibly biased and purposefully misleading article penned by Christina Blizzard on the topic of defunding abortion. The panel, representing Campaign Life Coalition, never once stated nor implied that abortion is only for the rich. Rather, it is not a medically necessary procedure and therefore warrants delisting from the Canada Health Act. It destroys human beings and corrupts and devalues human dignity across all spectrums of society.

Blizzard pontificates: "People of conscience have the right to whatever view they want. But they don't have the right to impose that view on the majority of people who disagree with them."

Talk about the pot calling the kettle black. The majority of Canadians has consistently been opposed to abortion but our laws dictated by the few have imposed barbaric consequences on its citizenry, charged them for it all the while imposing a death sentence on the most vulnerable and innocent members of society.

Blizzard then tries to inflame the passions of feminists everywhere by lashing out at the "three old white men" who sponsored CLC's news conference (as though old white men have no say in such matters). What she neglects to convey to her readers is the fact that two of the four panel members from CLC were women in their early twenties who fight tirelessly against deceivers like Blizzard to disseminate the truth about Canada's extremely archaic and unjust tolerance for abortion.

I guess, in these days of propaganda and disingenuous reporting, it is left to the common man to weed through the information, read with a wary eye and hold the media accountable for the deception perpetrated against them.

Until justice is achieved for the unborn, the debate can and will never be over no matter how much dishonest reporters like Christina Blizzard wish it.
